

Real Estate Survey 2021: Press release

The Euromoney Real Estate Survey 2021 is our 17th annual survey of the global real estate markets and canvasses the opinions of the leading firms involved in the real estate sector worldwide.

Advisers, developers, investment managers, banks and corporate end-users of real estate are all invited to give their opinion on which firms they believe have been the best providers of real estate products and services in their market during the past 12 months.

Senior executives fill in the survey at country level, and results are based on peer nominations and voter participation scores.

For the 17th annual real estate survey, we received 3,355 valid responses worldwide.

The full results will be published on www.euromoney.com on September 14 at 11am UK time-https://www.euromoney.com/surveys/real-estate-survey.

The 2021 survey was conducted between March 8 and May 21, 2021.

Among the key findings:

Cushman & Wakefield is the top overall global adviser and consultant for the fourth year running. It is also named best in agency letting/sales, property valuation and research categories.

Keppel Land takes the top spot in the overall global developers category, retaking the position it held in 2019 from last year's winner, Skanska. Keppel Land also wins the residential, retail/shopping, office/business, innovation and sustainability sectors. Sun Hung Kai Properties is ranked number one in the mixed-use and data centre developers categories, while GLP tops the ranking for industrial/warehouse developers, up from second place last year.

Cushman & Wakefield is again the best global investment manager in this year's survey, while Santander takes the top spot in the banks category, moving up from third place last year.
